

Anthropology On the Move...

Anthropology in London is an annual conference principally for anthropologists of the London colleges and universities to meet and share ideas arising from their current research and fieldwork.

This year's conference, organised under the aegis of SOAS, invites paper and panel proposals that explore movement in the broadest sense, including movement of objects, people, ideas, cultural practices, and narratives; the structures, discourses, and practices that aid or obstruct such movements; the movement of bodies in dance, ritual, and performance; and anthropological theory and practice 'on the move', in step with a changing world.

This conference provides a unique opportunity to explore the multiplicity of research directions and connections pursued by anthropologists based in institutions across London. The event focuses on emerging research clusters that cut across London anthropology departments, and aims to promote dialogue and collaboration for further research.

Call for Papers

Please send abstracts for papers or panel proposals up to 300 words to Stephanie Kitchen sk111@soas.ac.uk and Caitlin Pearson cp40@soas.ac.uk by Monday 2nd March.

Proposals from postfieldwork students, and staff members, from the University of London Anthropology departments are particularly encouraged. The organisers also warmly invite participants to submit fieldwork photos that speak to the conference theme, and short ethnographic films (max 5-7 minutes in length).
