The Igbo Conference is an annual international conference usually held at SOAS, University of London. The aim of the Igbo Conference is to encourage and promote Igbo Studies in the UK and beyond. In recognition of the limited avenues for Igbo language and cultural studies available in British Universities, the Igbo Conference seeks to provide a forum for intellectual and cultural exchange between scholars, students and members of the community.

As our conference serves as a unique bridge between the community and academia, each year we also include interactive sessions, masterclasses and workshops in our programme. In the last eight years, the conference has created discussions amongst contributors from all over the world. The ninth instalment of the Igbo Conference will be held in Nigeria for the first time at the University of Nigeria, Nsukka.

The study of 'mobilities' centres on the movement of people, goods and ideas. It explores the circumstances that bring about this movement, as well as the constraints to and the wider socio-political implications of this movement. We invite conference participants to engage with the concept of mobilities in relation to the Igbo experience in the pre-colonial, colonial and post-independence eras.

The Igbo have developed and sustained a reputation centering on their participation in commerce within Nigeria and abroad. The international dimensions to Igbo business practices provides one example of an Igbo-centred approach to the study of mobilities. The movement of people and goods along the river Niger was central to the development of cities in Igboland, and contributed to the development of the largest market in West Africa situated in Onitsha. Taking a historical view of mobilities, we encourage papers which examine the changing migratory patterns, trade routes and forms of knowledge exchange that have come about through Igbo mobilities.

In an increasingly networked and globalised world, we are interested in exploring the financial, cultural and intellectual impact and influence of the Igbo 'abroad' and at 'home'. This conference encourages a broad view on the usage of 'mobilities', encouraging contributions which look both at movement and exchange between the Igbo and their neighbours as well as the Igbo presence in our globalised world.

We invite papers that examine a variety of approaches to Igbo mobilities which include, but are not limited to:

- Igbo entrepreneurship and transnational business
- Military rule and the 'brain drain'
- The 'been-to' figure in literature & film
- Diaspora writing, music & film
- Igbo music in the local and global markets
- Igbo language and cultural presences in digital spaces
- Traversing national borders: issues of migration
- Hometown associations
- Xenophobia and Igbo communities abroad
- Igbo mobilities within Nigeria
- Nollywood films & their global circulation: iROKOTv, DStv & Netflix
- The river Niger & movement across West Africa
- Medicine and Health Matters
- Refugees & the Nigeria-Biafra war
- Igbo cultural production & the global market
- Igbo spirituality in the Americas
- Igbo language: differences in dialect & language in motion
- Igbo knowledge production & knowledge exchange
- The literature of Igbo writers in translation
- Trade and the development of Igbo towns & cities: Onitsha, Aba & Abiriba
